Federal Supplemental Security Income benefits are not keeping pace with rent increases

Approximately 2,381 people in LD 26 receive Supplemental Security Disability Income benefits. SSI is a federal program for aged, blind, or disabled individuals who are extremely low income. In 2025 the maximum SSI benefit is $967 a month or $11,604 a year. A rent increase of $249 a month will consume an additional 26% of an SSI recipient's total monthly income just on housing expenses. Federal disability cash assistance is not keeping pace with lower cost rental unit rent increases. While Washington lower end rents consumed 89% of SSI payment in 2010, lower cost rents now make up 120% of SSI benefits in 2023.

Data Source and Reference Information

The information is largely drawn from the most recent available American Community Survey data (2023) which is conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau. Statewide data from the U.S. Census Bureau's Household Pulse Survey is also included to supplement the American Community Survey (ACS) data. Data from the rental trend tracker Zumper is included for the most current rental price trends. For any additional level of detail on references, please email info@wliha.org and the Housing Alliance would be happy to provide that information.
